Investigating Money Matters of the Brother hood in Connection with the Land League Funeral—Some Unwilling to Own the Land.

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—The commentators of the Fenian Brotherhood, whose report of the alleged investigation was that they had discovered the investigation was in . . . that the treasurer had been spent . . . evidence in the investigation of the trustees in state . . . that they had been made that he and others would be held until they attend a meeting.

A detailed account showing the disposition of $80,000 including the . . . was declared from . . . openly declaring the . . . thing in . . . the land league.

The League Dies Hard

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 10.—At a meeting of branch members of the Irish National Land League, James Mooney, the national president, and J. S. Hynes, national secretary, attended. The question of Patrick Ford of the New York Irish World in closing a subscription list and declaring the land league out of existence was discussed and a motion expressing confidence in the national league was passed.

A union deprecated the motion as unnecessary, and said it was best to await advices from Ireland.

Hynes said such had been the determination of the meeting of the general council of the National Land League Saturday.

The resolution was withdrawn. The defection of Ford was considered to be of no national consequence, and the branch voted to forward $100 to National Treasurer Father Walsh as a contribution to the $250,000 fund.

Holding the Fort

JERSEY CITY, Oct. 10.—The John Dillon branch of the land league have adopted the following resolution regarding Patrick Ford of the Irish World, who has not been elected to any position in the league:

Resolved, That we repudiate his right to speak in our name or in any way control . . . and will continue . . . the properly constituted authorities on both sides of the Atlantic see fit to disband it.

Davitt Declares its Death

DUBLIN, Oct. 9.—Davitt, in a speech at Wexford yesterday, declared the land league had inculcated principles which were indestructible, but he was disappointed at the outcome. The league has, by the tremendous sweep of the government, been arrested in its career. The government had been furnished a pretext for the action by a . . . committed by some of the Irish people. Pleading for justice at Westminster, he said, was useless. The people should rely upon the Irish determination to arraign landlord ism before the civilized world as the cause of crime and disorder.

Nails in Its Coffin.

WEXFORD, Oct. 10.—Day it is a recent speech expressed regret at the results achieved by the land league, which had been arrested in its career by the government. Every murder committed since the suppression of the league had been an additional nail driven into the league's coffin.

WASHINGTON CITY.

American Navy Matters.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—A clause in the naval appropriation act directs the secretary of the navy to appoint a commission of three persons, one from the line of the navy, one from the staff and a third from civil life, to consider and report at the next session of congress upon the question whether it is advisable to sell any navy yards, and if so which. The secretary of the navy has made the following selections: Commodore Stephen . . . Chief Engineer . . . N. Loring, and A. B. Mullet.

The secretary of the navy has also selected the following officers to an advisory board on the construction of vessels: Commodore R. W. Shufeldt, Commander John A. Howell, Lieut. Edward W. Very, naval constructor Francis L. Fernald, chief engineer Alex. H. Anderson, and two civilian experts not yet selected.

The expenses of the marine hospital service for the fiscal year were $41 . . . relief . . . 800 pilots and . . . seamen were examined for color blindness . . .

Gold Certificates.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—The amount of gold certificates sent to New York yesterday for the signature of the assistant treasurer was $10,860,000, making the total sent to date $126,620,000. The treasury department and in September applications for their certificates from all sections of the country and the demand cannot be supplied fast enough by the present system. In order to facilitate the issue it is proposed to issue a certificate which would not have to be countersigned, and that question is now under consideration.

The Georgia Election.

MACON, Oct. 9.—Telegrams from all parts of the state indicate a quiet election and small vote. The entire state democratic ticket is elected by a probable majority of thirty thousand.

ATLANTA, Oct. 9.—The indications are that Stephens has polled nearly every county. His majority is forty or fifty thousand in the state. The regularly nominated democratic ticket for state house officers is elected.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 9.—The election for governor and state house officers passed off quietly throughout this section. Indications show the whole democratic ticket elected in the 4th congressional district by large majorities than were ever before . . . In Muscogee county the democratic ticket received over ninety per cent of the votes cast. The state senators and members of the house were elected without opposition.

Opposing Candidates Quarrel.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 8.—During the progress of a readjuster mass meeting in this city a recontre occurred between Gen. Peyton Wise and Smith, readjuster candidate for congress from the district in which the latter struck Gen. Wise a blow which . . . Subsequently . . . addressed the meeting bitterly denouncing Smith . . . the democratic opponent for congress. The next day the latter was heard to make his threats against Smith, whereupon a warrant was sworn out for his arrest. He was taken into custody . . . his appearance before the police court . . .

Protection vs. Free Trade.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 10.—A letter from Texas says that a political revolution is going on in the 7th and 10th congressional districts on the question of free trade. The entire wool growing interests of western Texas are in favor of protection, and at a meeting of wool growers was held at San Antonio Friday last, where it was resolved to oppose the election of Judge Hancock, the democratic candidate for congress in the 10th district, who is a free trader. A fund of $ . . . has been raised to put first-class protection speakers in the field against Hancock . . . and 8th districts with fair prospects . . . carried by the republicans.

An Interesting Correspondence.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Amos F. Larned, one of 900 stalwarts disapproving of Beecher's sermon favoring the republicans to bolt Folger's nomination, wrote the following:

Dear Mr. Beecher—You made an ass of yourself Sunday.
AMOS F. LARNED.

Beecher to-day replied in his candid statement in no less direct words:

Dear Sir—The Lord saved you the trouble of making an ass of yourself by making you one at the beginning, and his work stands sure.

Finerty for Congress.

CHICAGO, Oct. 9.—Over 300 voters in the 2d congressional district have requested John F. Finerty to accept an independent nomination. A call will be formally presented this evening. Finerty is a journalist of much ability and note, but is better known as an active Irish patriot, and as the 2d district is largely Irish, he is likely to be elected. He is a thorough gentleman and would be a credit to his race if sent to congress.

Folger's Resignation Expected.

NEW YORK, Oct. 9.—The Tribune's Washington special says: Folger's resignation as a member of the cabinet is likely to be tendered to the president at the cabinet meeting to be held in New York at the president's house on Lexington avenue on Tuesday prior to the departure of the cabinet for Boston.

Folger's Successor

BETWEEN TWO CITIES.

. . . that . . . that the . . . though the . . . little light . . . plunged that . . . state of . . .

Everywhere were displayed the high . . . a . . . of tall walls of lofty silver haciendas, walls designed for protection against armed bands. Handsome . . . and showy churches . . . outlines in the gray light . . . frost. But the . . . was the . . . est . . . solemnly . . .

We were . . . early this morning and by noon had reached . . . where a little narrow gauge railroad helps . . . the stage line . . . and . . . ration . . . clinging . . . of . . . possessing a good hotel and a . . . supplied by natural thermal water . . . bath basins built in masonry so large as . . . a swim . . . a current of water at blood heat flowed . . . This town contains the finest church I have seen in Spanish America . . . considering . . . of design delicacy of . . . whole structure there is not a tawdry . . . feature. The inside . . . white . . . with an occasional . . . of . . .

At . . . o'clock on the morning of the 23d we . . . Celaya . . . in Queretaro at . . . In the suburbs we passed . . . Cerro de Campana, where Maximilian was executed. I stood on the spot where he stood and tried to recall the last moments of the unfortunate young prince. Before . . . the hill . . . away to the . . . where . . . the city . . . embowered in trees . . . the . . . domes of its . . . churches. On this plain at the near foot of the hill were gathered the multitudes who had come to see how an emperor could die. Between the multitude and the . . . were deployed in line and in their front he . . . moment selected to . . .

Where Maximilian stood and . . . where the Mexican generals stood by his side . . . were executed with him are little holes in the ground . . . to preserve the memory of the place, or possibly . . . by putting up a monument.

The execution is not approved by the better Mexicans and it answered no good purpose and will have no influence in preventing treason or invasion. The best that can be said of it is that it was the . . . take of an energetic commander who forgot mercy and perhaps . . . in his zeal for . . . passion for his country.

Something also must be conceded to . . . and . . . quite humane recentment against the . . . and . . . by the . . . French ministers betrayed . . . and . . . the success of their invasion.

The miserable man who betrayed the emperor into the hands of the liberal forces for the sum of $30,000 lives now in the city of Mexico, and is a good deal more hated than the memory of Maximilian. He is shunned by society and spat upon by gentlemen in the streets who were not of the imperial party because he . . . been a . . . friend and confidant of the man he delivered to his enemies.

The society of Queretaro is said to be the best in the republic, but . . . very little of that during a rest of a few hours. The hot . . . and . . . the whole fair . . .

The neighborhood is famous for opals of which some very pretty ones were brought to sell to the passengers.

The city is supplied with palatable water by a fine aqueduct, a long line of forty feet arches, some of the piers at . . . feet high, extending across the valley from the mountain springs ten miles away.

It is not the credit of a country in the nineteenth century when iron is so cheap, that no better method of conducting water can be found than the same style of aqueduct in masonry . . . ground that existed before the Christian era, but this is the great glory of the present generation in Mexico that after the wretched . . . side of centuries they have shaken themselves clear of the debasing . . . system which has held them . . . and asserting the . . . have taken such a start forward . . . place them . . . among the nations.

To . . . with the beginning of enterprise in railroads . . . the introduction of a water . . . by means of iron pipes and the . . . of a system of drainage to the capital city of the republic.

The . . . Queretaro to San Juan del Rio . . . from the . . . has . . . famous . . . the . . . dations . . . when we passed over . . . region . . . fairly safe though six months after . . . March of this year . . . travelers . . . who had . . . road . . .

A few years ago these fellows coolly proposed to . . . on the . . . and . . . stronghold . . . traveling travelers . . . be prepared to deliver tribute of . . . each . . . and points or submit to being whipped with lash.

A story . . . told of the wife of one of these rogues who accustomed to dress in trousers and blouse . . . stopped the stage alone and collected the customary tax and when . . . drove away . . . pointed . . . at her breasts to show the men they had been robbed by a woman.

This the 23d of September, was to be my last night in the stage. To-morrow we should reach the Central road and the fatigue of the trip would be a dream of the past.

. . . was . . . seven of the morning after a ride of . . . in the stage we reached . . . of San Antonio de Tula. They . . . to a close . . . and it was the last . . . stage . . . company would have to make an unusual . . . this was the only way to do it. We had to wait nearly all day for the train which would . . . but there was a comfort to spend some of the . . . hours in . . .

However at ten o'clock on the night of the . . . I was landed in the hotel Iturbide in the city of Mexico . . . of the Aztecs. I had looked for a different style of hotel I confess for this great city, but it was the same old story, a brick floor, a little . . . in a corner a dirty washstand with a broken looking glass a door . . . no window . . . too large for a coffin but not large enough for a tomb.

At this . . . however, I have since learned . . . found that I had . . . as . . . above . . . ground as possible and this was . . . and . . . a cheap . . . I had got it.

The boy who showed me up brought a half candle along without a candlestick and proceeded to be . . . that . . . a drop of its own stearine . . . and . . . there was . . . another candle . . . After that I think it took him about . . . seconds of Mexican time to find a very shiny and respectable one.

Then I went to the bar for . . . lemonade, which the boy brought, telling me I could not have the change for my dollar till the glasses were returned.

I spent . . . at the hotel Iturbide and have never . . . since.

Except . . . groggeries and billiards it is an exceptionally uncomfortable establishment . . . every hotel here to one who is accustomed to the excellent houses of our own country.

There are however, in Mexico a few houses that compared with the hotel Iturbide are clean, agreeable and . . . conducted . . . such as the . . . the Gillow, the . . . and a few others, where prices are reasonable and managers polite.

LONDON LETTER.

Gossip upon Matters of Moment in England—The Egyptian Situation British Land Troubles—Doings of Prominent Men, etc.

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.

. . . Oct. . . . The Post . . . London special says: The Egyptian mystery retains impenetrable. The ministerial silence . . . and the journals do not pretend to know the probable policy of reconstruction. Gladstone's few words on Egypt did not touch the point at all.

The friendly messages from Bismarck last week have still further stimulated French jealousy. An exchange of views has taken place this week between Earl Granville and Mr. Tissot. It is conjectured that the French ministry is looking to extending some sort of compensation for the inevitable surrender of the dual control.

The protests against executing Arabi Pasha are numerous. They come from humanitarian sources mostly.

It is probable that the military authorities will order a review at Windsor or Aldershot on the return of the main body.

A much graver matter is the charge made by a correspondent of the Cologne Gazette that the English soldiers murdered Egyptian wounded. He alleges that the crime was witnessed by an Austrian colonel, and it is admitted by Col. Molluen. The latter adds a denunciation of . . .

The announcement of the closing of the land league fund by the Irish World is generally regarded here as forcing conclusive proof of the success of work of the Parnellite party. The belief is very strong that Parnell and his followers intend working with the liberals in the adjourned session of parliament, which is soon to open. The followers of Davitt and Dillon have seemingly had little to say themselves, and their future course is likely uncertain. The probability seems to be that under the double incentive of a good harvest and energetic enforcement of the law Ireland will be more peaceful for the next few months than it has been. This truce, if accepted, will enable Gladstone to push through the . . . so that obstruction in the house of commons will necessarily be dealt with summarily and so make provision for the payment of Egyptian war bills. It is no secret that it is intended that the bulk of this shall fall upon income tax payers. There is likely to be a great outcry, but the great majority of the people instead of our voters do not pay any income tax, and therefore will support Mr. Gladstone. It goes . . . the expectations cherished that we shall get off with ten million pounds at the outside estimate.

John Bright continues to be attacked sharply by the leading radical journals for declaring the Egyptian war to be unjust and unnecessary. The censure is against him and it is said that at the next election he will lose his seat for his assertions. It is rumored that Bright will retire from public life at the close of the present year.

The . . . is . . . in admitting . . . at present it is being . . . with considerable apprehension. . . . director . . . that . . . was to . . . of 1881 and 1882 . . . made a mistake in his calculation . . . his mistakes . . . clever astronomer . . . for Scotland. Matthew Arnold has at last made up his mind to accept the offers that have been made to him to go up on a lecture tour in our country, although the amount of money tendered him for an engagement is very large. The reason of his hesitation is . . . to be . . . that . . . he has enough to say to interest . . . and . . . audiences which will . . . United States.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCT. 11, 1882.

A GOOD POLICY.

A circular to Indian agents, just issued by the commissioner of Indian affairs, instructs all agents to give notice to Indians under their charge that, in pursuance of a recent act of congress, assistance to such Indians as are being subsisted in whole or in part by appropriations not required by treaty stipulations, will soon be diminished, and in consequence their future support will depend more and more upon their own exertions. They are also to be informed that the time must soon come when they will be expected to earn their entire support the same as white men; and at the same time they are to be assured that labor is highly honorable and ennobling.

It may be doubted whether this last piece of information, cheering as it may be in the abstract, will render palatable the piece that precedes it. The nobility of labor, though a beautiful doctrine, sinks but slowly into the Indian nature. Yet there is hope for the Indian in the fact that he is willing to have his squaw instructed in the doctrine and in the practical application of it.

It is easy enough to criticise the methods employed by the government in dealing with the Indians. But it is not so easy to point out methods which would be more surely successful. The problem is a hard one. Great effort is being made to impress upon the Indians a proper view of their situation and its requirements. Upon the young the pressure is intended to be as constant as the circumstances will allow. The Indian schools are one feature of the training. The department has just distributed $317,000 for the support of schools already established, or to be established. But the work is difficult and results must be slow. The tendency of the Indians to relapse into their old condition of barbarism is so constant that only unremitting effort can check it. Even among most highly civilized peoples a periodical tendency to relapse into barbarism has been observed by writers upon the philosophy of history. So it should not be strange that Indian youths from the schools at Forest Grove and Carlisle, on returning to their own people, should soon lose all they had acquired. Experience has often shown that white men, even of education, who go among the Indians to [illegible] adopt all the customs of the tribes, and in fact become Indians themselves.

The one way to improve the Indian is to make it necessary for him to work. This is the foundation of all progress. When the government cuts off his rations and tells him he must depend on his own exertions—that is, on his own labor, since it is no longer possible to live by the chase—it does for him the thing to which all gifts, annuities and appropriations from the treasury could never help him.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

It is conceded on all sides that a paid fire department for this city is a necessity. Our volunteer fire department has, indeed, served the city well; but a stage in the growth of the city has now been reached which renders a change very desirable, and for some reasons quite necessary. The act just passed by the legislature to authorize the city to organize a paid fire department is not opposed, so far as we know, in any quarter. Many think, however, that in order to start it right and make sure of securing proper efficiency in it, the commissioners ought to have been named in the bill.

This opinion is no way shaken by the appointments which the mayor has made. In the first place the commissioners ought not all to be chosen from one political party. In the second place the commission should be constituted as to all its members so as to afford assurance that this most important service will not become part of any political machine. Few indeed will take such assurance from inspection of the appointments submitted. The name of Mr. Failing will not secure general approval of the other two for this particular duty and responsibility.

Our fire department ought to be organized on the highest principles of responsibility and efficiency. No influence coming from any source outside of the most perfect devotion to this one object ought to be entertained for a moment. We are all concerned in maintaining a fire department, not as democrats or republicans, but as citizens with a common interest. The department ought to be under regulations as strict as those of our police service. The least suggestion of political influence in the selection of its appointees should be resented as an impertinence. It ought to be organized and conducted not only to afford security to property but to command the confidence and respect of the city. But there are many who do not hesitate to express their fear that it is to become a mere tender to a partisan machine.

THE CAUSE OF IT.

A republican journal of San Francisco says that "local jealousies and personal ambitions" are the cause of the delay in the choice of a senator in our state. The judgment is partly wrong and partly right. Of local jealousies we hear nothing. Locality has not affected a single vote on any ballot. And the only "personal ambition" in the way of easy settlement of the question is that of the one candidate, who presses his suit, now with shameless violence, and now with pitiful supplication. One moment he employs the bravado of the bulldozer; the next the whining solicitation of the beggar. The office he wants is not the property of the people; it is his office; it belongs to him, and they are little better than the wicked who keep him out of his own.

He has around him a crowd of mercenaries who constantly support these pretensions. With them ascendency of the republican party in Oregon means government of the boss, by the boss and for the boss—and his personal adherents. They are going to reorganize the republican party and allow no man in it unless he be a sworn supporter of the "only man." The managers are well along with this scheme. It has reached already the advanced stage of "Mitchel, or nobody." So the republican party is to be converted into a Mitchell party, with a corps of tag-rag democratic mercenaries, as a reinforcement. We shall see. The next scene in the performance will be the spectacle of the republican party making itself comfortably at home in the old mansion, with the looters of the "one-man" faction locked out.

COUNTY DIVISION.

Petitions have been presented to the legislature asking for the division of Umatilla, Wasco and Lake counties. All of these counties are very large—big enough for states if they only had population—and the distances from remote sections to the various county seats is so great and the means of travel so slow and expensive that the cost of transacting legal business is a severe tax. As an instance, it requires three days to travel from Prineville in Wasco to the county seat at The Dalles, and the round trip costs in the neighborhood of forty dollars, besides taking a week's time. In winter the roads are difficult to travel and the hardships and cost of the journey greatly increased. The sections desiring division appeal on the score of economy, claiming that the charges of separate county governments would be a less tax upon the people, than the inconvenience and expense under present arrangements. It is further claimed that much in the way of recording, etc., is improperly left undone and that the security of property is affected solely because of the great cost of going to the county town. People are getting into the way of doing business "at loose ends," and while as yet only occasional law suits result, the inconvenience in the future threatens to be great. The arguments seem all to be on the side of division and yet in every case before the legislature there is decided opposition. Present county towns and the neighborhoods oppose change on purely selfish grounds, and in one instance what may be termed a fight is being made. It is proposed by the withdrawing sections to assume their share of the county indebtedness in just proportion to population and they ask their proper proportion of the value of county buildings. Division in every case ought to be granted and it almost certainly will be.

Before many years there will have to be a wholesale reorganization of county lines throughout the state. Douglas ought to be cut into two or three pieces. Josephine and Jackson are far too large and the four or five state-like counties of Eastern Oregon will have to be divided and subdivided. [illegible]

Senator Slater in his remarks before the board of trade on Monday evening, spoke of improvement of the navigation of the Columbia river in a very encouraging way. He said: "It is safe to say that nine out of every ten men in Oregon are directly interested in the improvement of the Columbia river, particularly from Portland to the sea." No doubt of this, but there are many who do not see their interest in it as clearly as Senator Slater does. The chief effort now is directed, and probably for years will be directed, to construction of the locks at the Cascades. The views of this paper on this subject have often been stated. But it is evident that the people east of the mountains have founded great expectations on these locks—greater we think than will be realized. Nevertheless, since very large sums have already been expended on them, since another large appropriation has now been secured, and since it is evident that other improvements cannot get much attention till this one is completed, the clear way seems to be to push these locks with all possible effort, and to this end get all the appropriations for them that can be secured.

A very proper measure to guard the lands and premises of private owners against trespassers has been offered in the form of a bill by Mr. Kelly of this county. It ought to pass. Owners of enclosed lands have in many localities been treated for years as if they had no rights which the public were bound to respect. A class of sportsmen are constant trespassers. For example, a small steamboat will advertise to take a party of hunters as excursionists to Sauvie's Island, or some other place on the Columbia river, and return, for fifty cents or one dollar a piece. Fences built so as not to be moved by the floods are opened in many places that hunters and their dogs may pass, and these left open or very insufficiently replaced. [illegible] escape, and the result is annoyance, expense, and often heavy loss. Of course all sportsmen are not open to this charge; but the evil is serious enough to call for a law to define trespass more clearly and to make the penalties more sure.

The quack doctor and hermit, who preaches the gospel of morals and politics according to St. Hipple, is a person of remarkable intelligence and information. He writes under the impression that his "own" senator, now, and if elected will be his own successor. "Mr. Mitchell's place," says the official exhorter and chaplain to the machine, "expires next March." The grammar and the fact go limping together. Again: "In case of no election at that time there will be a vacancy during the recess of the legislature and the governor will then appoint his successor." The ring masters, being all at Salem, haven't time to revise all the late productions of their clerical scribe.

It was not expected that it would be proven that J. H. Mitchell had instructed Waters, DuBois and others to offer money and offices for votes for him. They would not testify to that effect of course; and to such transactions as Mitchell might have with his agents he would not call persons to act as witnesses who might afterwards be summoned upon an investigation. If anybody expected to see the committee by testimony which would be sufficient in a court of law, establish Mitchell's connection with the attempts to bribe, such person was quite too short sighted.

The condition of the republican party in New York and Pennsylvania, where defeat is certain, shows what comes of boss management, the machine system and stalwartism, all of which is represented by the Hipple-Mitchel party in Oregon. The republican party will not allow itself to be ridden and driven in this way, and the bosses would do well to make a note of it.

The Salem Statesman complains that the mails are going wrong. Of course. Nearly all the postal officials in the state have been at Salem for more than a month to swell the chorus for the boss, and to prove that public sentiment is unanimous for him. The "only man's" business first of course.

The Jacksonville Sentinel says the "republican party prefers defeat without the boss and machine to success with them." Right. The Sentinel is talking about Pennsylvania, but the remark is just as true of Oregon.

Democratic Help for Disgraced Republican Bosses.

Philadelphia Times Ind Dem.

John Hipple Mitchel, the Oregon candidate for senatorial honors, has succeeded in securing three more democrats. It is to the everlasting discredit of a portion of the democratic party that when a republican boss becomes so odious that the decent members of his own party repudiate him he frequently manages to save himself by the purchaseable democratic material which is only waiting for a bidder. John Kelly and Squire McMullen have frequently saved the New York and Pennsylvania bosses from utter overthrow by the decent republicans, and it is very apparent that Oregon is cursed with enough of the same dishonest breed to disgrace the democratic name and probably help the masculine bosses to a substantial victory in that state.

Mob Law.

In an article deprecating mob law, but accounting for its existence by the failure of the courts to accomplish the objects for which they were created, the Chicago Inter Ocean truly says:

Justice should always be held superior to law, for law is a creation of human intelligence, while justice is an attribute of God himself. When they go hand in hand together, a community is in no danger of falling into the ways of barbarism; but when they are at variance, the decision rests with the people, and if the remedy is heroic it is to make the cure radical.

Democratic Scandal.

One of Mitchell's strikers offered Frank Nichols, of Wasco county, $500 for his vote, which made nobody more irate than the so-called democrats who had previously sold out at a much less figure.

Democratic Splutter.

Wasco democracy has a howled renegade Gates that his course in voting for Mitchell is not approved of. He probably received the same to apply to his wounded pocket.

APPOINTMENT IN DEFAULT OF ELECTION.

SALEM, Oct. 10.

To the Editor of the Oregonian:

The communication in your columns of this morning, over the signature "E," makes a very interesting and instructive presentation of the question of the governor's authority to appoint a senator to serve until the next meeting of the legislature in case the present session ends without an election. From the manner of treating the subject as well as from the signature, I infer the discussion to be the work of a gentleman whose repute as a lawyer would of itself entitle his views to high consideration, irrespective of the attitude of the senator toward the subject as presented by him. In the conclusions he reaches, I am not disposed to question the conclusion he reaches, nor do I believe there is any reason to suppose Gov. Moody has intimated any intention to exercise the power to make an appointment.

It is not, therefore, to criticise the opinion of your correspondent on the main question that I crave a little space in your columns, but to call the attention of your readers for a moment to enter a protest against his assumption that if Gov. Moody should appoint he would name J. H. Mitchell as the senator. I do not pretend to speak by authority of the governor; but I know him well enough to feel safe in trusting his good sense, his sense of propriety, his respect for public sentiment, his honest good wishes for the party that has made him governor, and his purpose not to make his administration a failure. All these considerations combine to prevent his appointing Mitchell. By all the arts and wiles of the accomplished politician Mitchell has from the first of the session, and from before the session began—pressed himself upon the legislature for election. By blandishment and flattery, exhortation and argument, by threats and intimidation, by personal importunities and supplications such as have never been witnessed before in any senatorial election, such, indeed, as have brought upon him the contempt of even his friends, and cast aside the charity of his opponents to be not be mixed with pity—by all these measures, added to the disgracefully lavish use of money and promises, and the services of a lobby of place-hunters disreputable in the very numbers, not to speak of the character of its personnel, Mitchell has urged his election to the senate. If he cannot thus secure his election, can the governor appoint him? Can any man who has the faintest glimmering of sense of propriety ask his appointment? When the legislature shall have definitely refused to elect him—shall have gone even the length of saying by its adjournment without an election, that it is better for the state to be unrepresented than be misrepresented by him—can any politician have the effrontery to ask the governor to appoint him? Whoever makes the request is no friend of Governor Moody's and will surely receive such a rebuff as will make him see the mistake of assuming the governor to be an idiot. No man has clearer perceptions than Moody of the state of the public mind, and it requires no great sagacity in this case to see that the appointment of Mitchell after his rejection by the legislature would bury Moody's administration beneath a mountain of popular indignation, and prostrate the republican party throughout the state. Such appointment would be so outrageously absurd that it is simply impossible.

A WORD FOR DR. CARPENTER.

PORTLAND, Or., 10th Oct., 1882.

To the Editor of the Oregonian:

I have read with great regret your remarks in this morning's issue in reference to Dr. H. Carpenter, and I beg permission to set you right on one or two points upon which you have evidently been misinformed.

You aver that "he (Dr. Carpenter) has never had the special study fitting him for the place he seeks [illegible] and even in the usual work of medical practice he has not shown special abilities."

I have known Dr. Carpenter for several years and have met him frequently in the formal relations of professional life as well as the more intimate relations of social life and I think I know somethings not only of his professional attainments and skill, but also of his favorite line of thought and his special field of study and investigation. Now I know beyond all doubt that for a long time Dr. Carpenter has made the care and treatment of the insane, as well as the organization and management of an asylum for the insane, a special study, and has devoted to these things deep thought and patient, thorough investigation. Nor is this to him a new field of study, for in the east during his college career and afterwards he gave it particular attention; and he has thus had "the special study fitting him for the position he seeks." Delicacy forbids that I should do more than barely allude to Dr. Carpenter's well known integrity, kindness of heart and administrative ability. Suffice it to say, that those who know him best are fully satisfied that he possesses in large measure all the qualities, both of head and heart, that preeminently fit a man for the superintendency of an asylum for the insane.

As to the averment that in the practice of his profession Dr. Carpenter has shown no special abilities, I have only this to say, that it is as true as most the truth as that other averment sometimes made by certain obscure editorial midgets in remote country villages, that in the usual work of metropolitan journalism the editor of The Oregonian has shown no special or marked ability. The one allegation is just as worthy of notice as the other.

Believing that you would not do an intentional injustice, and knowing full well that you have been misinformed, I ask you the favor to give this note a place in tomorrow's Oregonian. With kind regards, I am very truly yours,

[illegible]

Nothing Gained by Kicking.

San Francisco Chronicle.

There is never anything gained by the kicking of the better element of a party to the other side. Such a compromise is pretty sure to end in defeat. In the first place, the lower class of the party who care more about spoils than about party and they must have all or nothing. In the next place you are never sure of your men when you get them. No matter what is done to placate such howling demagogues they are restless and dissatisfied and play secretly into the hands of the enemy.

Democratic Opinion.

Jacksonville Times.

N. H. Gates, democratic senator from Wasco and Lake, also went over to Mitchell, body, soul and breeches. This political hack has been kept in office for several years by the constituents he so shabbily betrayed, but he is now securely bottled up and can enjoy his swag in the obscurity of private life, to which he has relegated himself.

CRUELTY AT SEA.

HOW THE SHIP "CHALLENGER'S" CREW WERE TREATED.

A Terrible Narrative from New Tacoma—Every Sailor Beaten and Bruised and One Unmercifully Tortured.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE TO THE OREGONIAN.]

NEW TACOMA, Oct. [illegible]

The American ship Challenger, of Bath, Maine, Captain Mumford, from Philadelphia with railroad iron, arrived at New Tacoma on the [illegible] instant, shortly after, and immediately after her arrival at the wharf the deputy sheriff, Mr. C. Windsor, of Pierce county, was directed to arrest George Conway, the first officer and John Bennett, the second officer, on a charge of cruel treatment of the crew on her recent passage to this port.

This fact having been stated and considering the excitement being exhibited, your correspondent, in company with Mr. Ferry, of Portland, visited the ship in the interests of truth to gather up the facts which are given below.

Not finding the captain [illegible] for we were courteously received by the first mate. He was somewhat reticent, but stated that the crew had proven incompetent, and in the discharge of his duties he had treated the men roughly, as it was necessary, to advance the interests of the ship. He said that the sailor who was lost during the passage had probably fallen overboard and fell from the forecastle—the crew declare he was driven overboard—and that the seaman who had lost himself during the passage and had been chained in an apartment under the topgallant forecastle during the last [illegible] weeks of the passage, was insane.

Just as these items were gleaned the deputy marshal took the first and second officers away to the court held by Judge Young; accordingly, Mr. Ferry and I proceeded to the forecastle and spoke with the men. They were the sorriest looking crowd that I have seen for many a day. They were thirteen or fourteen in number; of these six or eight had blackened eyes, seven of them had scalp wounds, some quite serious and apparently of recent infliction. One stated that his jaw had been fractured by a blow from the second mate. Three affirmed that they had their noses broken; one had a bad swelling in his neck, produced, he said, by a blow inflicted with a belaying pin; five or six had bruises on their arms and hands, and two or three had black and blue and green blotches over the back and shoulders and every man but one said that he had been frequently beaten for the most trivial reasons. My friend and I then sought for the so-called insane sailor. We found him chained and locked in the little room under the topgallant forecastle pointed out to us. His conversation seemed to us to be quite rational, and his complaints were made in a quiet and sorrowful tone. He told of cruelties practiced upon him by the two officers arrested, which were almost incredibly inhuman. When he learned that my name was Chaplain [illegible] he besought me to secure for him the services of a physician, which I promised to do. Dr. C. W. Harvey responded to my request and made a professional call upon him. Being invited to supply the pulpit of the Presbyterian church I did not call again on board till Saturday. The captain explained to me that the man was locked up because the officers had been summoned as before stated. He also assured me that orders had been given by him to have the doors of the room unlocked.

Monday, Oct. 9th, being subpoenaed to appear in the court before Judge Young, I heard the testimony of the sailor who had been chained during the passage. He was brought up to answer to a charge of insanity preferred by Capt. Mumford, (Lealiave); Drs. Bostwick and Harvey were sworn as experts. They listened to the heart rending and sickening recital of the poor sailor's sufferings and abuses. All present were visibly moved by the harrowing tale as related by this victim of the power wielded by brutal officers. This man (Smith) is almost a wreck. He came on board the ship a stout, robust man, about the first of May last, and on the 4th or 5th of July following, under the pressure of the beatings so continuously administered and after he had been suspended by small cords to a beam until the excruciating pain extorted from him the confession by which he had secured the account he gave, written of the beatings inflicted on himself and others by the men for some time previous, he took a revolver and in sheer desperation shot himself in the breast, hoping thereby to end his misery. In this he failed, as the ball glanced and followed a rib, lodging under his left arm, where it now is imbedded. The doctors, Bostwick and Harvey, returned the certificate furnished them by the court and declared the man to be "of sound mind."

The above is written as facts so far as the case had been conducted at the time of writing this report.

The testimony of the officers which [illegible] their trial will elicit, it is sincerely hoped for our country and for humanity's sake, may materially modify the general statement made out of the courtroom, and I appeal for the officers a suspension of final judgment until they are heard in their own defense.

Apropos to the foregoing it is my privilege to chronicle the remarkable forbearance of Captain Reed of the ship Bullion. He was most wantonly insulted by a drunken sailor. Capt. Reed would not strike him nor administer the castigation which might have done the fellow good and which he most richly deserved. Very few men would have let the foul-mouthed, drunken fellow off so forbearingly. Capt. Reed maintained his dignity and has appealed to the law which will mete out to the chap and his accomplices the merited penalties.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.]

SEATTLE, Oct. 10.—The ship Challenger, 150 days from Philadelphia, loaded with railroad iron, arrived at Tacoma Saturday evening. As soon as possible the captain went up town and made complaint against the 3d mate, charging him with insanity. An investigation of the case demonstrates about this state of facts:

Shortly after the ship left Philadelphia the 1st and 2d mates commenced their inhuman and brutal treatment of the sailors and because the 3d mate refused to assist them in their fiendish work he was cruelly beaten and sent before the mast. He was [illegible] so tortured that he preferred death to such a life and attempted to kill himself, but the bullet failed to do its work and lodged in his right breast. For this he was heavily chained in the floor of a little dark room, too small to lie down in comfortably in, and kept there for three months, with no more care than that bestowed by the [illegible] of a healing, if they did anything [illegible]

The sailors say that the captain proposed to them several times to throw the man overboard, claiming that he was crazy and a ship never had any luck with an insane man on board.

This poor devil was not the only one who was inhumanly treated on the trip. The entire crew were beaten, bruised and maimed.

An examination of the captain's charge of insanity made before Judge Young at New Tacoma to-day resulted in acquittal. Complaints have been filed against the captain and first and second mates by the sailors, and they will be brought to this city for a trial before Chief Justice Greene.

Like complaints of cruelty against the officers of the ship Harvester, which also brought iron for the Northern Pacific Company, were made. Nineteen of the sailors who arrived some weeks ago, are awaiting the meeting of the present term of the district court. They, to the number of fourteen, were confined in the U. S. penitentiary of the territory, [illegible] willing to go on their bonds that they would appear at the proper time to testify against those whom they had complained. These were brought here yesterday to await the action of the grand jury in their case.

SAUCE

The ancients' great [illegible] for preparing food was for the most part [illegible] of the digestion easy. Digestion, therefore a sauce had to be created for the palate which afterwards became a great desideratum in the cuisine, and he who could produce a favoring appetizer was considered no less a contributor to history than the laurel-wreathed victor of the battlefield.

The Greeks and Romans carried [illegible] some superstition, the Fennel [illegible] the sauce which gained by sought competition for the palm which [illegible] the manufacturers of the Mont Erst Lime Fruit Juice Sauce which is not of distinctive natural but is accustomed to all the [illegible] making them palatable and relishing viands. Lowenthal, Livingston & Co., of San Francisco, are the importers and general agents for this coast.

FINE CARRIAGES.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to the class of work that is being turned out at the New Haven carriage factory, corner Fourth and Ash streets, this city. We refer to the new complete [illegible] just finished to the order of the Oregon Transfer Co., [illegible] nothing like them have ever been produced before on this coast and they cannot be excelled for beauty, durability and finish anywhere; there is no need of going abroad to find [illegible] or the east for carriages [illegible] such excellent workmanship in this city.

INQUIRIES ANSWERED

To the Editor of the Oregonian:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 1.

Will you please answer the following questions and oblige a number of mechanics of this place?

1. Are there any iron foundries in Portland, and if so, how many?
2. Are church privileges good?
3. What is the climate generally in winter?
4. Are wages good?

SUBSCRIBER.

1. There are three good-sized iron foundries and machine shops, and several small establishments. They are kept busy throughout the year.

2. All leading denominations are well represented here with ministers, good church buildings and Sunday schools.

3. Winters are mild. It very seldom freezes, as I know does not fall to an average three times a year and then very light. From the middle of October to the middle of April is the rainy season.

4. Sober mechanics can find employment here at better wages than paid in any eastern city, and equal to the highest wages paid in any city on the coast.

LAKE COUNTY NOTES.

[FROM THE OREGONIAN'S LOCAL CORRESPONDENT.]

LOWVILLE, Or. Oct. 4.

Col. S. G. Whipple passed through town a day or two since on his way from Fort Klamath to Benicia barracks, Cal., to spend the winter.

We are having very stormy weather. It has been snowing and raining for the past week and winter seems to have begun in earnest already.

J. B. White, of Oakland, California, has purchased the largest trader's store at Fort Klamath, and has gone to San Francisco to buy goods for the same.

The people of the western end of Lake county are jubilant over the prospect of a division of Lake and a separate organization under the name of Klamath, by the present legislature.

The black-leg has reached the Klamath basin and is killing many cattle, but is confined principally to calves and yearlings. Nearly all the beef cattle have been sold and delivered, and there are good in consequence.

THE CATTLE TRADE.

Views of a Southeastern Oregon Man—Almost a Panic—The Former Cattle Boom.

In a letter to a member of this office, under date of October 2d, the writer, a resident of the southeastern portion of this state, in speaking of the operations of the stock ranges, says that the price of cattle of all grades has advanced so materially as to amount to almost a panic. A few extensive stock dealers have concluded that the increased figures are only temporary, and are disposing of nearly all of their cattle later on in that region, which is a very satisfactory margin, and will invest them on former investments, while others have taken the opposite view of it and are purchasing additional interests on the range in the belief that the advance is permanent. The demand for beef cattle from the ranges, in the early decline [illegible] there has had an effect upon cattle dealers in the latter class to [illegible] further investments in either land or stock until they [illegible] better the [illegible] extent of the influence that will have upon the market. Many extensive cattle merchants in the excitement of a similar panic in 1871 were [illegible] by heavy purchases, but lost by the disaster that the advance from the [illegible] of the necessity that created it, was permanent. When the [illegible] sold [illegible] they were compelled to [illegible] the losses their rash investments [illegible] who assume to know now [illegible] to the [illegible] will be noticeable in a year or so from the time of the commencement of this panic. It is, however, the rise in the price of cattle has struck at the foundation of that section of country rather abruptly, and unless a very strong fall is experienced the result will be entirely satisfactory.

WEDNESDAY MORNING. OCT. 11, 1882.

WANTED—MEN.

The times are rife with a fever taint,
In the very heart of the people;
Not bereft of priest, and abridged of paint,
Or beggared of bell and steeple;
Glutted the market with tract and tome,
Tithes and missions and psalters;
But God's white fire is low and dim,
In our souls and lives it falters.

We have anise and cummin, spice and myrrh,
We have stole and font and chalice,
Cross and cushion for worshiper,
And unction for lips of malice;
Nave and chancel, with organs grand,
Messiahs (operatic and holy);
And vestibule for "the lost" to stand,
With the shivering poor and lowly.

Gorgeous temples of brick and stone,
Gilded and carved and fretted;
Flowers and vases adorn the "throne,"
And "mourners" (for sins regretted);
"Talent" in pulpit at highest price
Breaks "the bread of life" serenely;
Wealth and fashion, pride and vice,
Tread the velvet aisles how queenly!

Brewers, importers and jobbers make
Fine pillars for churches of power,
Mild and soft, for subscription's sake,
The lessons they give the hour.
Oh, mouldy legends and iron creed,
Vain words for the lives that perish.
We want the service of gentle deeds,
Heart dew and eyes that cherish.

We want a faith that shall ever keep
True step with the works of kindness;
A priest so high that his glance will sweep
Through the mists of our social blindness;
Not quaking slaves to a council stern,
But men of a wise endeavor,
Whose love of God and of man shall burn
In their thoughts and lives forever.

See, Mammon is welcome at every hearth,
While the Lord is a "Sunday caller!"
Style and splendor, and lofty birth,
Make the "rights of man" look smaller?
Sound and whining, or frantic zeal,
Drown the still, small voice of duty,
And few are the Christian hearts to feel
A meek life's chastened duty.

The age wants men who can front the stars
With their manhood's gaze undaunted,
And keep white lives from the evil scars
The world's rule code has granted.
Bold men of brain, in whose veins the blood
Runs warm with a hero's yearning,
Like the martyred sires who unblanching stood
All the tyrant's thunder spurning.

Brave men to question, to think, and know,
To walk with a victor's tread,
Unashamed in detraction's fiery glow,
If in honor's path they led,
To face a fact, or a blazing gun,
As calm as death, and true
To the heart there love has divinely won,
With a angel's host in view.

A Prince with Plenty of Nerve.

Among the many anecdotes related of the steadiness of nerve of the veteran Prince Charles of Prussia, as a boy, is the following: On the 20th of October, 1811, the prince being then ten years and four months old, he was dining at Wustrau castle, with Count Zieten, the only son of Frederick the Great's renowned cavalry general. His host was a very eccentric person, inveterately addicted to practical joking, and upon the occasion alluded to had prepared an unusually startling surprise for the juvenile prince. Count Zieten rose during dinner to propose the health of the king, and as the words left his lips a whole battery of field guns, which had been posted just under the dining-room windows, was fired off at a volley. Everybody present started except the Prince, upon whom his host's eyes were steadily fixed. Observing with great satisfaction that the royal lad did not even wink, Zieten turned toward him with the question, "Not afraid of cannon, eh, your royal highness?" Pointing to the walls of the apartment, lavishly adorned with portraits of officers of the Zieten hussars—the regiment of which, all ablaze, Frederick Charles always wore the scarlet uniform—Prince Charles quietly replied: "Certainly not, in such company as this," and went on with his dessert as though nothing unusual had been done or said.

Seats Exchange.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

In America a fortune is given for the chance of making one. It is stated that the membership in the New York Stock Exchange of the late A. B. Baylis has been sold for $31,000, or £6200. The last previous sale of a membership in the exchange was at $27,000 or £5400. One can become a member of the London Stock Exchange for a tithe of this immense sum, but the difference of value is fundamental. In the one case the monopoly of membership is strictly limited; in the other nothing but want of means or connection keeps a man out, and so accommodating is the London Stock Exchange, that it is at this moment knocking down surrounding buildings in order to increase the area at the disposal of its members. In Paris the circle in which agents de change stand is open only to a given number, but, as we saw, in the last crisis, this is in connection with the official control under which the monopoly is placed. The New York monopoly, it was given out sometime ago, was to be broken by an opposition stock board, under, we believe, Mr. Gould's patronage, but that scheme seems to have failed, and mainly because the attraction to the board market is paramount. Even with the aid of electric appliances, such as telephones, a market in which the biggest dealers did not congregate would stand little chance of attendance from the multitude.

A very pretty story is told of a nightingale owned by Miss Thursby, and which accompanies her on her travels, as follows: She had given a concert at Prague before an aristocratic audience, in which each person vied with his neighbor in doing her honor. Flowers and presents were showered on her, and people wondered how it was that the noted connoisseur, Prince Wittgenstein, should have given no practical token of his admiration. The next day the prince called at her hotel, accompanied by a servant carrying a bird-cage. "Madame," said he, "I am at a loss to express fitly my rapture at your singing. I consider that there is not on earth another voice like yours. Let me beg of you to accept this pair of nightingales as a souvenir. I own nothing more precious. Pray teach them how to sing." All this might have passed for a neatly-turned compliment if the nightingales had been ordinary nightingales, but they were a good deal more than ordinary birds—they were historical birds, and the red cross marks on their breasts indicated them to be the lineal descendants of a couple of warblers brought from Palestine by a crusading ancestor of the prince, who, taken prisoner at the siege of Jerusalem, had been solaced always during his long captivity by their visits to his dungeon window. When the knight's ransom had been paid he asked that his feathered friends be given to him. The sultan consented, and from that time there has always been one couple, and no more, of red-cross nightingales in the family of Wittgenstein, from which they passed into the possession of Miss Thursby; and, as one of the birds has died without heirs, the race will become extinct. The survivor is as lively as a cricket, but it disdains any trills of less exalted parentage; and thus ends the legend of the Bohemian nightingale from whose notes the prima donna has learned her "Chanson de l'Oiseau."

The sudden and tragic ending of the life of Mademoiselle Feyghine in the apartments of the Duc de Morny at Paris, is of significance mainly as marking a tendency in the habits of the young actresses of the Comedie Française in these late days. The pretty goddesses of the Français were always fond of dukes and princes and the gentlemen have not been at all backward in lavishing their affections and purses and characters upon the mademoiselles of the Comedie Française. It has been a very pretty mutual admiration society. The Rachels, the Bernhardts and the Croizettes all went this way. But these actresses minded their art, were women of brain and genius, worked hard and caught men's hearts by the brilliancies of their dramatic powers. It is not, then, in her liking for the Duc de Morny's apartments that Mademoiselle Feyghine was peculiar, but in the grade and quality of her powers of fascination. The feminine stars of the Comedie Française to-day are not women of genius, that win men by the sunbeams of art and mental superiority. Mademoiselle Feyghine had neither the genius nor the industry to captivate princes by her dramatic art, and having caught the Duc de Morny by a lower influence he naturally grew weary of her, and she having lost her heart and her head together, has just ended her poor life with a pistol. No doubt art is better than passion but the marvel is that the ruined actress did not end de Morny's life as well as her own.

A correspondent says Mr. G. N. Boyer, a Carillon tradesman, was going to bathe in the Ottawa, near the old canal, on Wednesday morning, and just as he entered the water a huge fish seized his foot. The water was reddened with blood, but with the assistance of bystanders the fish was made to let go, and Mr. Boyer was, with some difficulty, able to go home. In the evening the monster was caught with a less interesting bait, and turns out, says the correspondent, to be a muskallonge, weighing 47 pounds.—Montreal Witness.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

House called to order at 2 P. M.

Roll called and quorum present.

Jamison, of special committee on investigation of the bribery charges in the Dubois matter, submitted a report with the testimony. Ford moved that the report and testimony lie on the table for the present. The motion was withdrawn, when the following is the committee's report:

IN THE MATTER OF [illegible]

Mr. Speaker—Your investigating committee, appointed under House resolution No. 13, [illegible] after having fully considered all the evidence taken before us in relation to the alleged attempt of Hon. A. W. Waters to influence the vote of [illegible] Gilbert in the senatorial contest now pending before the legislative assembly, beg leave to submit the following as our findings and conclusions thereon:

First—That the conduct of the Hon. A. G. Gilbert in the matter has been honorable and straightforward.

Second—That the conduct of Hon. A. W. Waters relating to his proposition concerning the Salem post office does not in any manner [illegible] other charges in this matter the evidence taken before us is so conflicting that we are unable to find the facts.

Third—That Senator Waters, in what he did in this matter, acted entirely on his own responsibility, and that Mr. Gilbert so understood it at the time.

C. M. JAMISON,
F. A. PATTERSON,
A. H. TANNER,
Committee.

THE DUBOIS MATTER.

Mr. Speaker—Your committee after having fully considered all the evidence taken before us in the matter of the alleged improper proposals of Charles Dubois to Major Bruce to influence his vote in the senatorial contest now pending before the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, beg leave to submit the following as our findings and conclusion thereto:

First—That the conduct of Major Bruce in this matter has been honorable and straightforward.

Second—That the conduct of Charles Dubois towards Major Bruce was a direct reprehensible.

Third—That the evidence shows that J. H. [illegible] had no connection whatever in the matter, and that Mr. Dubois acted in the premises without any authority whatever from Mr. [illegible].

Your committee beg leave to extend their thanks to their attorneys and all parties who have so kindly assisted the committee in the discharge of their duties. Having now taken the evidence in all cases of alleged bribery or attempted bribery brought to our notice or knowledge and made our findings of fact from the evidence so taken, and having now completed our labors we respectfully beg to be discharged. We recommend that J. G. Chapman, who has served the committee as clerk, be paid for his services the sum of $5 per day for the period of thirteen days. All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. M. JAMISON,
F. A. PATTERSON,
A. H. TANNER,
Committee.

Tuttle moved that the report be accepted and the committee discharged; adopted.

Plummer moved that the report and testimony be filed away subject to the order of the house at any time.

H. B. 29, to divide Umatilla county, reported with amendments by Gaunt, chairman of special committee. The committee recommend that the new county to be created be called Thurston instead of Hill; report adopted and bill ordered engrossed and read a third time on Thursday at 2 P. M.

STATE INSANE ASYLUM.

H. B. 31 relating to the management of the insane asylum, reported with amendments by Gilbert, chairman of the special committee. The amendments were adopted. The bill provides that the governor, secretary of state and state treasurer shall be a board of trustees of the asylum and govern and control the same.

Isom moved to amend by having the board consist of the governor of the state and three other trustees elected by the legislature and classified so that one shall go out of office and his successor be elected every two years; amendment lost.

Harris moved an amendment that the superintendent and his assistant be not allowed to furnish furniture and provisions.

Dunbar moved that the words "household furniture and" be stricken out of Harris' amendment; lost.

On the vote, Harris' amendment was lost.

Ford moved an amendment that the superintending physicians reside in the asylum building; carried.

Ford moved that all physicians employed give their entire time and attention to the patients in the asylum; carried.

Eakin moved that the house meet at 7:30 P. M. to listen to some select readings by Miss Lane.

Hindman asked leave of absence till to-morrow morning; objections. Blank moved that leave be granted.

Hindman said he did not understand that he had been sent down here to listen to lectures and elocution, and he did not wish to be marked absent at roll.

Jamison said he proposed that Hindman should hear the readings and lecture whether he wanted to or not.

The ayes and noes were called for and the motion to excuse Hindman was lost; ayes 20, noes 41.

On motion further consideration of H. B. 31 was postponed till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

A message from the senate announced that the senate has accepted the house's invitation to hear Lieut. Schwatka's lecture.

The speaker announced that he had signed H. B. No. 121.

Patterson and Tuttle were granted leave of absence till to-morrow and the house adjourned.

A New Yorker who is largely interested in one of the coastwise lines of steamers, made a trip to Charleston a few weeks ago, and soon after leaving New York a storm came on, and the craft was tumbled about in a manner to frighten many of the passengers into the belief that their last hour had come. The stock owner was the sickest of the lot, and in the midst of his woes he was approached by a friend, who is largely interested in New England railroads.—"I understand that you are a railroad man, that you are considerably interested in this line?" "Yes." "You own about half of it, don't you?" "I believe I do." "Do you own any railroads?" "No." "[illegible]" "And do you run trains on them?" "Of course." "And they stop at stations?" "Certainly." "Then you are the biggest fool in America for traveling on a steamship, even if I do own half the line!" shouted the sick man, and he turned his face to the wall to wait for death to come.—Wall Street News.

They looked hungry and tired, and they were certainly ragged and dirty as they sat on the side of the street. "Jim!" suddenly remarked one, "I've struck the biggest idea yet!" "Found a plug of tobacco?" "Not much. Suppose us two should buy one line of railroad in the United States?" "Yes." "Look what our income would be for a week! It couldn't be less than $25,000. We'd keep 'em four weeks, secure a fortune of $100,000 each, and then sell out and go to Europe." "We'll do it." "Come on!" They hopefully entered the depot to make arrangements with the ticket agent to buy that road as a starter, but in two minutes one came out of the door on a jump and the other went through a back window which was open. They may yet succeed, however, and holders of railroad stock should be ready for a sudden revolution in the market.—Wall Street News.

In Rhode Island a countryman, on a visit to friends, went a-fishing. He caught a small pickerel. He was near-sighted, and his mouth had the habit of standing ajar, and, therefore, owing to the shortness of sight, the fisherman's mouth came very near to the fish when it was unhooked. Unexpectedly, needless to say, the fish, by a sudden jerk, unhooked itself, jumped into the man's mouth, and made straightway for his throat, and ran part way in. A cat and a fish are alike in one respect—they cannot be pulled by the tail the wrong way of fur or scale. When the man attempted to take out the fish his back fin stood up and interfered, and the man ran home to his friends, who pushed the fish down, and the fisherman had a meal. You may rise up and denounce the foregoing as a base fabrication, but persons can be produced who will swear to the main facts in the case.

"What's the price of this saucer?" asked a lady of a dealer in bric-a-brac the other day. "That piece is worth $65, ma'am," replied the polite merchant. "Sixty-five dollars!" exclaimed the shopper, evidently surprised that the article could not be bought for a dime. "Yes, ma'am, $65 is the price of it. It is very choice." "You don't mean to tell me that you ask such a price for that little thing!" "That is exactly what I wish you to understand, madam; but you must know that this saucer is over one hundred and fifty years old." "Well!" exclaimed the lady, after catching her breath, "it is the smallest thing for its age I ever saw." And, taking one more look at the diminutive antiquity, she gathered up her drapery and sallied forth in search of a dollar store.—Yonkers Statesman.

Oddest of all defensive methods is that of snapping off the tail. The blind worm, or slow worm, is a little snake-like lizard found in the old world. When alarmed it contracts its muscles in such a manner and degree as to break its tail off at a considerable distance from the end. But how can this aid it? The detached tail then dances about very lively, holding the attention of the offender, while the lizard itself slinks away, and for a considerable time the tail retains its capability of twisting and jumping every time it is struck. The lizard will then grow another tail so as to be prepared for another adventure. There are other lizards which have a similar power, though in a less degree.

Some Chinamen happened to see that shrimps were remarkably large and fine in Barataria bay, near the New Orleans, and at once engaged in the business of exporting them to China, where they are a highly esteemed article of food. The shrimp are placed on a platform two acres big to dry in the sun, after which they are put in bags and beaten until the outer shell or covering is removed. Then they are salted, wrapped in tissue paper and packed solidly in barrels, bearing Chinese characters like those on tea chests.

HOMES CERTIFICATES.

It is not the interest stuff pretending to be made of wonderful foreign roots, barks, etc., and puffed up by long bogus certificates of pretended miraculous cures, but a simple, pure, effective medicine made of well known valuable remedies, that furnishes its own certificates by its cures. We refer to Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines. See another column.—Republican.

TO THE PUBLIC

It is generally conceded that the enterprise [illegible] city about five years ago, and known as the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE, has met with a success [illegible] in the mercantile history of this State, and [illegible] in its nature.

The cause underlying this success is not [illegible] It is simply this: The people of Oregon [illegible] long a time been the victims of grasping [illegible] dealers, having for so many years been ground [illegible] heel of an avaricious guild, have at last had [illegible] to the fact that their dollar, no less than any [illegible] worth one hundred cents, and ought, by right, [illegible] much as if in the hands of the merchant.

To the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' [illegible] the credit of having released the people from the [illegible] yoke, of having redeemed them from their [illegible] having enlightened them upon a point so vital [illegible] perity. This vexes those merchants who [illegible] pace with the march of time, who are [illegible] themselves to smaller profits, and who never [illegible] because they never learn anything, and they [illegible] selves. They are spotted; the people know [illegible] them, while the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' [illegible] become the household word in every family [illegible] is to them synonymous with honesty, [illegible] dealing.

To take advantage of the fair fame [illegible] FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE has a right [illegible] taking from which their competitors do [illegible] sense of honor does not deter them from [illegible] consequently it often occurs that when [illegible] time in this city, happens to fall [illegible] to believe, when asking for the FARMERS [illegible] STORE, that he is just in the place [illegible] every device, chicanery and false [illegible] deceived. This has occurred so often [illegible] proprietor of the above mentioned place [illegible] ed to notify those who have so long [illegible] disreputable practice, that unless they [illegible] will, though reluctantly, seek redress [illegible] channel. He has, in accordance with the [illegible] of the State, delivered to and had recorded [illegible] Secretary of State, the words "FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE," as a TRADE MARK, to be used [illegible] taken to his store. The undersigned [illegible] fail to an infringement upon his rights [illegible] for a moment so vaillant [illegible] reap the benefit of his labor, and [illegible] ers to be thus imposed upon. He therefore [illegible] cautions all persons so using [illegible] he will hold them strictly responsible [illegible] cute them to the extent of the law, which [illegible]

Any person, firm or [illegible] designation or device [illegible] of profit, shall forfeit to the use of the [illegible] imprisoned one-half of the profit [illegible] be in the interest [illegible] Code of Oregon, Sec. 3, Chapter [illegible], Miscellaneous Laws [illegible]

Loud was their wrath and dire their threats of actions, and of the compensation they would exact from the company. I left them to their grumblings, and passed to a first-class which had not been overthrown. By the aid of the guard's lamp we saw a lady sitting with clasped hands, apparently paralyzed with terror; while to add to the confusion a thunderstorm now broke forth in a deluge of rain. It was out of the question to leave the lady where she was. "Madame," said the guard, anxiously, "I trust you are not hurt."

The lady did not stir or speak.

"Madame," I said, coming to the rescue of the guard, "suffer me to help you out; you must not stay here; pardon me!" and I took her arm and tried to raise her.

She burst into a torrent of tears, with her hands before her face, but without uttering a word or rising. I saw that she was utterly unhinged in her mind, though it seemed fortunately not in person.

What was to be done? Guard and I looked at each other in doubt; still she could not be suffered to remain; so I took up dressing-bag and cloak which lay on the opposite side and handed them to the guard. On doing so, a name caught my eye, which was engraven on the lock of the former article, 'Ellen Frere.' It touched an old key-note within me, but that was all, and I applied myself again to remove the lady.

"Thank God!" at last she said, devoutly, and I started at her accents. Once such tones had vibrated in my mind, but that was all gone—still could it—could it be? Swifter than thought I seized the guard's lamp, and in the rudest but most eager way held it up to the lady's face. There were the well-remembered violet eyes, suffused now with tears, the fair cheek blanched with terror, the half opened lips that had twice before so powerfully attracted my fancy.

"Now, then, sir, look alive!" said the guard roughly. I awoke from my amazement.

"Miss Frere! how very fortunate! I am thankful indeed that you are not injured. You remember me? Robinson, whom you met at the Land's End? Now you must let me take you out, and I will see to you, and not leave you till I have safely handed you to your friends."

"Mr. Robinson!" she said, dreamily; "ah, yes; I will leave this now," and she took my arm while I hurried her out of the train. Luckily the accident had happened a hundred yards from a little station, and we were soon under its shed, she trembling convulsively still, and clasping my arm tightly. I let her remain silent for a few minutes, I then poured out some sherry for her from my flask. This revived her, and she said with a sweet assumption of her own graceful manner: "Mr. Robinson, how can I thank you enough? but what shall I do? I have forty miles yet to travel to S——, and my luggage lost, and I with such a headache! so shaken with it all!"

"The first thing is to telegraph to your friends at S—— that you are safe. To whom were you going?"

"To the Lamberts."

"They are friends of ours, oddly enough. You must let me telegraph to them that you cannot go further to-night. Then stay with us, only a few miles on—with my mother and sister. They will do everything in their power for you; and you can go to-morrow, when you have rested."

At this moment the station-master's wife came to beg Miss Frere to enter her home till a few carriages were got ready to proceed, and I devoted myself to helping the wounded, and doing what could be done to alleviate their sufferings. In an hour the road was sufficiently clear for an engine to take three or four carriages on; Miss Frere accompanied me, and much to my mother's amazement I took her home. It was quite clear that she could not proceed, however, for she fainted more than once before I got her safely housed for the night. Nor could she leave her room for three days.

It was impossible for the above events to have happened without my having old feelings strongly recalled to my heart. I was miserable, anxious and distrait until she was able to be brought into the drawing-room. I was decidedly in love with Miss Frere.

I could not, however, do more than worship my goddess assiduously, as if that did aught but heap fuel on the fire! She was a rich man's daughter—nay, his only child. Mr. Frere had been down to see her while she was ill, but had been obliged to hurry off, and gratefully commended her to our further care. What right had I to interfere with his plans?

Another consideration had still more weight with me. She never named Buchanan, which I had magnified into an acknowledgement that they were engaged—especially when I remembered the familiar terms on which they had been on the only two occasions when I had previously met Miss Frere. How could I be so unreasonable to my friend as to undermine him in his absence? Clearly I could not make love to his fiancée. But I was nettled all the same; and I, too, never mentioned his name.

Our talks became longer and more confidential. Sometimes I even read to her. Then there were always little cares to be attended to, flowers to be put near her couch, her shawl to be arranged over her feet, and so forth. It was a sweet yet a terribly dangerous thing to be thus brought into such close relations with a lovely and loveable girl. Perhaps she felt it too, for she was in no lively mood the last two days of her visit.

The end must come to the sweetest dreams. Miss Frere was now well enough to leave on the morrow; I was to depart for India on the following week. Naturally that evening we were neither very cheerful. My sister was gone to visit a friend; my mother knitted in silence; our talk also had gradually died also into silence. Twilight crept in and brought its store of sad memories. We were to part for a long term of years to-morrow. Still, how could I speak of love? Be base to Buchanan, and abuse his trust? Never!

At length Miss Frere rose and went to the piano. She had a light touch, and a voice as full of expression as her face. After a few soft bars, she broke into the dreamy music of "Faust," and sang with the utmost pathos. I listened, leaning on the back of my chair with rapture. Presently she stopped, and remained seated at the instrument as if in deep thought. I had never till then noticed that my mother had been called out of the room.

After a pause I rose. "Miss Frere, to-morrow will end the sweetest week of my whole life."

"Will it, indeed?"

"Can you doubt it? And next week I go to India. I positively hate India."

"Yes; no doubt."

"I hope, Miss Frere, that you will be very happy. I am sure that you deserve ..."

"I do? ... thank you all the same!" and still she remained pensive.

At last I said, desperately: "Well, I shall sometimes—often—think of you. When is the happy day to be? Excuse my asking, but I feel quite an old friend, you know."

"To-morrow."

"To-morrow! Good gracious! Miss Frere, what do you mean?"

She looked up startled: "To-morrow. Did you say when was the unhappy day?"

"No I said when was the happy day?"

"What happy day!"

"What happy day! Why—when—when—you know—well—when you are to be married!"

"Married!" and she jumped up and opened her eyes widely; "married! who ever said I was to be married! What do you mean?"

I remained silent a moment. We looked into each other's faces, and then loudly laughed.

"Why, of course," I said, feeling very much relieved, "I thought you were going to marry my old friend Buchanan."

"Marry my cousin Dick, whom I have known from his cradle! Who ever thought of such a thing?"

"Then if you are not going to be married, I—I——"

"I am not going to be married at all, I tell you," she said, archly.

"But, Miss Frere—Ellen—don't let us make our lives a waste for want of a word. If I asked you to be married for the sake of a very old, old love that I have cherished for you, and because—well, because of our preservation the other night—and I drew near and took her hands—oh, Ellen!"

"Well, if you asked, perhaps I might possibly consent to change my mind—" that was all she said, for in another moment she was at my heart.

After a moment more I said: "Well, when is the happy day to be now?"

"When you like."

The Minister Ceased to Wonder.

Apropos of the Egyptian troubles, we wish to relate a little story, the circumstances of which occurred during our trip to the Holy Land several years or more ago.

He was a devout Christian, and had made the study of the Bible and a proper understanding of the Big Book the highest aim in life.

When he arrived at the Sea of Galilee his heart was filled with awe, and he felt enervated and cleansed by the thought that he was gazing on the very spot where his Savior once stood.

Approaching the boatman, he addressed him in his choicest Arabic, and with Bible and commentary in hand he awaited an answer.

'Ah! what 'smatter 'th yer? Why don't yer talk United States?' asked the man contemptuously. He was a real live Yankee, who was picking up a living by ferrying tourists across the sea.

"So this is the Sea of Galilee?" devoutly murmured the searcher after knowledge.

"Ya-a-s."

"And the is where our Savior walked upon this waters?"

"Ya-a-s."

"How much will you charge to take me to the exact spot?"

"Wa-al, you look like a clergyman an' I don't want to charge you nothin'."

The devout man boarded the boat, and at last is pointed out where the miracle is said to have occurred. After gazing at the waters and dividing his time between glances at his books and devout ejaculations of satisfaction, the searcher signified his willingness to return.

"Charge you $20 to take you back," said the speculative Yankee.

"But you said you would charge me nothing."

"Naw, didn't. Nothing to bring you out. Twenty to get back."

"And do you charge everybody to take them back?" asked the searcher.

"Y-a-s, that's about the figure."

"Well, then," said the devout one, as he went down into his clothes, "no wonder our Savior got out and walked."—[N. Y. Dispatch.

The Title of Rail-Splitter.

Mr. Seward was nominated in the Convention by Mr. Evarts of New York. Mr. Lincoln was nominated by Mr. Judd of Illinois. The nomination of Mr. Lincoln was seconded by Mr. Delano of Ohio, who said: "I desire to second the nomination of a man who can split rails and maul Democrats—Abraham Lincoln." This probably originated the term "rail-splitter," which immediately became popular. Decorated and illuminated rails surrounded the newspaper offices, and became a leading feature of the campaign. "Rail-splitter battalions" were formed in the different cities and minor villages of the North. At a great ratification meeting at Cooper Institute, June 8th, after speeches by Messrs. Evarts, Blatchford, G. W. Curtis, General Nye and Judge Tracey of California, the last-named said: "We wage no war upon the South, we harbor no malice against the South. We merely mean to fence them in;" (pointing significantly to a rail exhibited on the platform) "this is all we propose to do to stop the extension of slavery, and Abe Lincoln has split the rails to build the fence."—[The Century.

The Luck of a Broken Corset.

Miss Greiger snapped a corset steel at a picnic. Mr. Barnes heard it and begged to be allowed to make her a pair that would not break. She consented. Being a skillful mechanic, he invented and constructed an improved kind, and she was for three years supplied with them, at the end of which time they married. The question has been before the U. S. Supreme Court whether the wearing of the invention by Miss Greiger was such a "public usage allowed by the inventor" as will prevent Barnes from obtaining a patent. The court decided against Barnes, and Justice Miller dissented: "If the little spring," he says, "inserted in a single pair of corsets, and used by only one woman, covered by her outer clothing, and in a position withheld from public observation, is a public use of that piece of steel, I am at a loss to know the line between a public and a private use."—[New York Sun.

Church Attractions.—Saratoga was recently well besprinkled with posters announcing that the Rev. Dr. Newman would preach the following Sunday in the First Methodist church, and that Gen. Grant would be present. As a result of this clever advertising the church was crowded to the doors; but people were divided as to whether the congregation was Dr. Newman's or Gen. Grant's. Appearances rather favor the latter belief, however, for when the preacher dismissed his hearers, not one of them showed the slightest inclination to leave. But as soon as the General walked down the aisle (after waiting five minutes in hopes the crowd would disperse) they all made haste to follow him.

SUPPLEMENT.

VOICES OF THE SEA.

Wakeful by day at night, I and heard the
The pulsations of the restless sea
The moaning surges
Sail ed like dirges
From souls far back eternity,
Whose spirit from the deep are stirred.

Awaking from the morning light,
Again I listened to the sea;
But with its surges
We hear no dirges,
But only life's activity;
Morning dispelled the gloom of night.

At morn I sauntered forth to view
The throbbing of that living sea;
But it was surging,
But only urging
All men to be both strong and free,
Strong in the soul with conscience free.

At closing day once more I stood,
Gazing across the angry sea;
Far ships were sailing;
The light was failing;
Time lost in mirror misty,
Was the reflection of my mood.

It is the mind, and not the place,
Our mood and not a varying voice
That fills with sadness,
Or thrills with gladness
A soul whose one great ruling choice
Reflects in all things its own face.

THE ORIGINAL MICAWBER.

A New York Bohemian Who Claims That Distinction in Connection with Dickens' Father.

Thomas B. Gunn, an English litterateur, well known in New York many years ago, contributes a pleasant story to the Detroit Free Press concerning the original of Dickens' famous character of "Wilkins Micawber." He says: "In recent numbers of the Free Press there have appeared paragraphs on the asserted identity of this immortal character with one Thomas Powell, a soi-disant literary man, still extant in New York city. 'There must be some mistake about it,' was the editorial comment after an allusion to Forster's admission that Dickens pore sat for the portrait—of course involuntarily. Indeed, the account of him and the specimens of his conversation given in the biography would suffice to prove this, if his illustrious but scarcely filial son had not left evidence of the fact concealed in the very name of the guide, philosopher, and friend of the juvenile 'David Copperfield.' Obviously, it was formed in this way: Taking the words 'my father,' Dickens changed the f into the third preceding letter c, the t into the third succeeding letter w, the h into the third preceding letter e, but, requiring a consonant, tried back three more letters and changed e for b. The result is the word 'Mycawber,' but, still more disguise being desired, the y was altered into i, which completely transformed my father into 'Micawber.' I fail probability, the resemblance of the sound of the word to that of macaw, with its suggestiveness of a parrot-like fondness for talking, was an additional recommendation.

"That by the way. But while there is no doubt of this identity, it can also be proved that Dickens availed himself of certain peculiarities of the Thomas Powell aforesaid in making up the character. Micawber includes both; and hence the tradition.

"Powell came to America in 1851. He was never a contributor to the New York Tribune. Dickens' letter was written to Lewis Gaylord Clark, editor of the old Knickerbocker Magazine, who (to the best of my recollection and belief) published it in that periodical, whence it was copied, with sharp comments by Horace Greeley or C. A. Dana, in the Tribune. Powell blustered a great deal and threatened a lawsuit but nothing came of it. His exposure was certainly not caused by his calling Cornelius Mathews 'the American Dickens,' for that sobriquet had been applied to him before —notably in Lowell's 'Fable for Critics,' published in 1848. Mathews imitated Dickens' style in his prose works, and wrote 'Chanticleer, a Story of Thanksgiving,' somewhat after the model of the Christmas books. Powell praised his 'Puffer Hopkins' as superior to Dickens in his 'Living Authors of America,' which Mathews unquestionably did not write, though certain underhanded ways of his may have caused such a suspicion. Dickens' charges against Powell included more than those mentioned by 'Asmodeus,' but, as he is now an old man, I do not care to specify particulars.

"The two were certainly acquainted, if not intimate, in England before 1851. Powell had some connection with the press in the old country, and once supplied (an a title to a volume contributed to by Wordsworth, Leigh Hunt and others. The Philadelphia life of Dickens, by Dr. Shelton McKenzie, was mainly based on his very dubious information. His resemblance to 'Micawber' has been accurately and minutely set forth in a story entitled 'Pan Flower,' printed nine years ago in the Boston Index. It was Powell who first proclaimed the quasi identity of 'Harold Skimpole' with Leigh Hunt, as I had the honor of informing Dickens in a letter from New York, to which I received an answer. Dickens is not only traduced and maligned, through many obscure publications, but also slandered indirectly after his death. But for that I should hardly care to volunteer these details."

THE COURTESIES OF TRAVEL.

It is common to say that, in losing the old stage-coach, we have lost that comfortable sociability which once made travel so great a charm. But we have lost something more. We have lost that humane instinct which, in the olden times, made all travelers considerate of one another. Travel—probably the derivation of the word is suggestive. It was work, and hard work, in the old days; and out of the common strain and the common hardship came a co-operative and fraternal spirit which transformed its hardships into pleasurable memories. But the Pullman car is a refrigerator. In transporting fruit from California, the first condition is that there shall be coldness, and then—isolation. The nectarines must not touch each other. In like manner, as we multiply the luxuries of travel, we multiply the barriers between the travelers. It is not merely that there are parlor cars: it is that in these, as in the ordinary American railway carriage also, the first consideration comes, more and more, to be personal comfort, and not mutual consideration. The grudging answer, the reluctance to impart information, the almost brutal struggle for the best, which increasingly disregards we knees and age and woman—these are things which one sees now more frequently and more sadly than of old. We talk of the garrulous and interrogative American. But where is he? Vanished as utterly as the Massasoit Indians. An English gentleman, who has traversed the continent, said that he had never traveled in a country in which his fellow travelers were so reserved.

It is a mistake, if it is no more. There is no one whose horizon may not be widened, if he will only avail himself of the wholesome education of the fellowships of travel. It is easy to be too much on one's guard. All travelers are not swindlers, and courtesy is not necessarily familiarity. As it is one is reminded of that countryman of ours who, having crossed the Atlantic with a room-mate who, from the beginning to the end of the voyage, had not addressed to him one word, parted from him, saying airily: "Well, good-by! You will now proceed, I suppose, to your home at the deaf and dumb asylum!"—Topics of the Time, in the September Century.

TENNYSON'S OBSCURITY.

The little which Mr. Shepard has to say about Tennyson illustrates how skillfully and successfully the poet laureate has kept himself out of public observation, how effectively he has eluded ever newspaper reporters and interviewers. Tennyson figures chiefly in R. H. Horne's "Spirit of the Age," 1844, and in a baffling subject in William Howitt's "Homes and Haunts of the Poets," 1847. Fanny Kemble alludes briefly in her "Records of Girlhood" to an evening spent with him in 1832, and twenty-two years later a writer just grazes him in the story of the Manchester exhibition, as stated in his "Note Books," Caroline Fox, too, has a reference to him in her recently published "Memoirs." But this is about all. From a collection of certain newspaper paragraphs, however, Mr. Shepard has set this picture of the [illegible] for what it is worth. [illegible] Tennyson's [illegible] brusqueness and bluntness about it which is at first rather startling for one who has only known him through his books. He utters his opinions in a plain straightforward way, choosing the homeliest Saxon words and rarely raising to anything like the heroic strain. His disregard of the conventionalities of life is, however, thoroughly natural and unaffected. He is an inveterate smoker. A brother poet who spent a week with him at his country seat, says that Partagas, Regalias and Cabanas have no charm for him. He prefers a pipe, and of all pipes in the world the common clay pipe is his choice. His den is at the top of the house. When he sits down to work in the morning, a bough of tobacco large enough for an ancestral, and a stands at his feet together with a box full of white clay pipes. Filling one of these, he smokes until it is empty, breaks it in two and throws the fragments into another box prepared for their reception. Then he pulls out a fresh pipe, fills it, smokes it and destroys it as before. He will not smoke a pipe the second time. His chief delight is not in communion with his fellows. Rather it is to lounge at the window of his study, surrounded by a few choice books of favorite authors, and in full view of the magnificent island scenery with the gray line of undulating hills and the streak of silver sea in the distance.—Literary World.

POTATO HISTORY IN EUROPE.

Shakespeare mentions potatoes twice—once in the Merry Wives of Windsor, once in Troilus and Cressida. In the latter and later play "Thersites," in the former "Falstaff," is the speaker of the word. Of course it is an anachronism; but what root did Shakespeare himself allude to? The word potato in 1602 and 1609, the dates of those plays, respectively, designated two different plants—one our potato, a solanum, the other a convolvulus, a wellknown plant at this day, but too tender for our climate. It is grown under glass. This latter root, batatas, was imported from Spain, but merely as an article of food, and was anterior in time here to the introduction of our now common potato. There is no evidence, though there is opinion, of the exact date of the introduction of this plant—our potato—into England. But, as it is figured in Gerard's "Herbal," published in 1597, though under the mistaken name of batatas, and must have been previously known in England, Shakespeare may very well have known both roots. Now, if we look at the context of "Falstaff's" speech, the allusion is plainly to a common error of that time, as to the supposed provocative qualities of the root. But, as such errors soon become current the imputation may have arisen as to the later in time, or it may have fastened on the earlier and have extended to both. It certainly was so believed for a time as to our common potato. The context, then does not really help us. Both plants came to Europe—to Spain—from Spanish America about a century before 1609. As the beauty of the plant could not have been the motive, our potato must have been introduced into Spain, whence it spread into the low countries while under Spain, as an article of food; but it did not for many years become an article of food in any of these countries, nor in England. It made slow progress, and there is a general silence about it. We may reasonably suppose that every grower of it who heard of its nature, tried it once or more as an edible tuber, since for that purpose it was grown. The reasonable conclusion is that it did not at first please European palates. Ireland was the first country in Europe in which it became generally grown as an article of food. Thence it extended to Lancashire, and the Lancastrians made it known and brought it into use in other English counties. It is in my own recollection that "no cockney can boil a potato" was a common opinion in Lancashire. Sydney Smith gave it his sanction when he said the first question to be put to a candidate for office, "Can you boil a potato?" I do not in the least question that Hawkins introduced the potato into Ireland. I see no improbability in that tradition. But evidence we have none, at least none has fallen under my observation, though I have searched for evidence in all such works as I have at hand. The early transactions of the Royal Society may possibly throw some light on the subject. I can find nothing in the diaries of Evelyn or of Pepys relating to the potato. Had Pepys eaten of it (tentatively) I think he would have called it as he does tea and nettle porridge.—London Times Letter.

Cat-Meat on the Sly.

Visalia Delta.

The details of a peculiar incident in the foothills come to the Delta so well authenticated that they will bear repetition. In Mill Creek Valley, just north of the line between Tulare and Fresno counties, is the mountain ranch of Mr. Tuomy, who formerly lived near Hanford. Recently three young men, one the son of Mr D. and two sons of Mr. W. full of fun and mischief, went from the Mussel slough country for a hunt. They camped near Mr. Tuomy's house, using the water from his spring. About the time of their arrival, Mr. T. missed some chickens from the roost, and supposing the mountain foxes were catching them, he set a steel trap for them. One morning, while the young men were still in camp, he found a large tom-cat caught in the trap. Its leg was broken, so Mr. T. killed him to put him out of his misery. Now, as he had heard that panther's grease was good for oiling guns, and as he found that cat was fat he thought to grease would answer the same purpose and concluded to save it. So he skinned the cat literally, boiled it and stewed it thoroughly, and skimmed off the grease. Having to leave the ranch on business that day, and being in a hurry, he left the cat in the stew pan and fastened the door. On his return he was surprised to find the boys were gone, and still more surprised to find the cat was gone, all but the bones. Evidently the three boys had concluded to have a square meal at the old man's expense, and finding the tender, savory stew there, had devoured it with a gusto. They left without knowing that they had eaten a tom-cat, and do not know it yet, unless they receive some light on the subject from this brief sketch. But there is not a shadow of doubt that those young men ate that cat, taking it perhaps for a tender jack-rabbit. Tell us, friends D. and W., how does that cat meat taste? If true that "forbidden fruit is sweetest," it may be equally true that stolen cat, unlabelled, tasted sweeter than if they had known what it was.

A Passion for Draw Poker.

Captain John Hartley who, about five weeks ago resigned his commission in the army, under peculiar circumstances, has also mysteriously concealed himself. A Washington correspondent says his actions for the past few months have been singular. About four months ago he was detailed to the office of the rebellion records, in charge of Colonel Scott, and when that officer left on his summer vacation, Hartley was placed over the office. Capt. Hartley is very fond of the national game of poker, and indulges his love for it to an inordinate degree. Finding himself a chief of bureau, Captain Hartley to be in fashion, followed his regular chief and all the other chiefs away from Washington on a summer trip, and made such a prolonged stay that Colonel Scott returned ahead of him. The chief not at all pleased to find that his subordinate had followed his example, asked that he might be relieved from duty at the office and sent back to his regiment. In the mean time, one of Capt. Hartley's friends in Washington informed him of the colonel's return, whereupon the truant, instead of coming back and facing the music, put off in haste for Canada. The next news from the fugitive came in the shape of a resignation, duly made out, and forwarded to the department. The officers pail, of course, been offended by Hartley's conduct, but did not wish to lose him from the service, so both Colonel Scott and General Ruggles telegraphed him to withdraw his resignation and all would be well. Hartley replied that if they were friends and wished to favor him, they would urge the secretary of war to accept the resignation, upon which Secretary Lincoln took him at his word. Since this correspondence Hartley's friends have heard nothing from him, and he is supposed to be too busy playing poker to write. While on duty here he would play poker all night and until noon the next day without a break and then go to the office decidedly the worse for wear. Of late his passion for cards was supplemented by a taste for drink, and between the two his official duties suffered. It is supposed at the department that he left the city in order to indulge his favorite pastimes in Philadelphia and other northern cities, and one story is that he made such a pot that an army officer's salary is no longer an object.

Men Wearing Bracelets.

London Daily Telegraph.

For some time past the quaint old Pagan fashion that bracelets should be worn by men as well as by women has been gaining ground upon the continent, chiefly, it would seem in countries where the prevalent creed is Roman Catholicism. The bracelet is an elegant and fanciful illustration in the Austrian and Italian cavalry and, indeed, the majority of Austrian noblemen, being addicted to field sports, are accustomed to wear St. George's medals set in silver bracelets upon one or other arm, the saint of the dragon being generally recognized by equestrians as their patron saint. Archduke Rudolf, the Austrian crown prince, wears upon his left wrist a bracelet of chain-mail, visible in a photograph taken immediately after his marriage and representing him arm-in-arm with the Archduchess Stephanie. The late King Victor Emmanuel, a mighty hunter, in his day, always wore a massive bracelet containing a medallion of St. Hubert, the same that is now worn in memory of him by his son Italy's actual sovereign. Austrian naval officers are addicted to the wearing of porte-bonheurs in which are medals bearing the effigy of St. Peter, while the bracelets of imperial and royal artillery officers are invariably commemorative of St. Barbara's piety and personal attractions. Ross and Salvini, the two great Italian tragedians being also excellent horsemen have caused broad bands of silver, framing medals of St. George, to be riveted upon their upper right arms. It is believed that this bracelet-wearing fashion has spread to England, and has been adopted by more than one distinguished personage.

Madness and Genius.

A century and a half ago Dryden remarked that "Great wits to madness sure are near allied," while Shakespeare says that

The lunatic, lover and poet
Are of imagination all compact.

Collins, the author of "Passions," was insane during the latter part of his life, though he did not survive the middle age. Cowper was a melancholy lunatic during the largest part of his life. The poetic artist, Blake was also crazed, and wrote the prettiest poetry ever composed by a madman. Charles Lamb, at the age of twenty-one, was for six months in a lunatic asylum, and his sister Mary, who had occasional spells of madness, killed her mother in one of these frenzies. Our own Percival was also partially deranged, at least his strange method of life can only be explained by this theory. It is also said that Shelley was insane on the point of his intense hatred of the character Jesus. Even Gerrit Smith, whose talents and benefaction have given him such distinction was at one time the inmate of the asylum. A painful feature in the life of the poet Campbell was the lunacy of his eldest son, and the expense of maintaining him in an insane asylum for life kept the poet poor. The only son of Howard, the philanthropist, was equally unfortunate and died in an asylum.—Utica Herald.

France is still unrivaled in two things both highly essential to the perfection of a toilet. One is the trimming of a bonnet, the other the draping of a mantle or of a skirt. Recalling the well-known recipe for a perfect salad, which requires a miser to dole out the vinegar, a spendthrift to pour in the oil, and a madman to stir in the whole, one might say to secure perfection of a costume it should be cut by an English tailor, draped by a Frenchman, colored by an Italian, and the details supplied by a Spanish woman.
